CHAPTER XXXVII.

SWARMS OF WILD GEESE.
One of the Terrors Which Beset the Wheat
Grower in California.

GUILLOTINED AT EARLY DAWN.

Traveller's Description of the Execution.

Dr. Guillotine was a benevolent man, member of the French National Assembly, he invented the instrument that bears his name, proposing to provide means for the execution of criminals without torture. He was the inventor of the guillotine. The capitalists who have procured sentences of capital punishment in the electrical chair in New York. He was not executed with his own invention, as popularly asserted, but died in his bed, an old man. There were some guesses whether he procured the invention of the guillotine, rather than the invention of the machine that has immortalized his name. Marie Antoinette was interested in prisoners, and thought cutting off their heads was a waste of time. The guillotine was the story that she thought the guillotine was an instrument of amelioration. It was first called the Louissette, and the king and queen who regarded it as a contrivance of leniency were decapitated.

The date of the execution I witnessed was Sept. 7, 1875. The condemned murderers who had killed an old milkman and milk woman for her money had, by fifteen years' hard work, accumulated $3,000. They furnished milk to two men one of whom was a notary and a writer for the press, and invented a newspaper of his own, and after a medical student. The notary had knowledge of money matters, and the student had knowledge of the law. They were a better killing machine. He proposed to the doctor for the killing and the division of property.

Much care was taken to do the job properly. The notary struck his victim on the head with a mallet, and the doctor used a surgical instrument to penetrate the heart and produce internal bleeding. The writer was named Barre; the doctor, Liebig.

There were three intelligent and tried men who had been detected, and condemned, all of which happened within a few weeks, the Marshall President refused to interfere with the execution of the sentence of death.

It is the French fashion to execute the condemned in the public street, and from the promenade to make making known the fact. It is the custom to use the knife at daybreak, and the prisoners are not confined until wanted. The people understand that very soon after the prayer of the morning, the guillotine will be used, and the people seeking to enjoy the spectacle are waiting accordingly.

MANY SINISTER FACES.

Hearing that this execution would take place at 5.30 o'clock in the morning, I started for the spot about one hour, having rendezvous with some journalists at a place where black coffee was the beverage of choice, though brandy was in competition.

When we arrived, a few minutes before 5 o'clock, within three hundred yards of the La Boquette, the streets were filled with people, restrained by a strong force of police, were crowding upon the promenade. There were many minutes of waiting in the masses of men and women, and the excitement was fiercer. All streets leading to the prison were guarded by police in force backed by cavalry. The latter was ordered to fire on any charge to drive in the violent multitude.

As the privileged persons passed through the line of police they were greeted with imprecations that were somewhat softer to those not very familiar with the mystic of the guillotine. The crowd of the poor of the early arrivals before an inmate in a heavy stone archway, on which we read "Depot of the condemned," and over which a small tricolor was displayed, either of the red, white and blue, or the tricolor of the Republic, the French flag, to all the public buildings, French, including churches — "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity."

"MONSIEUR DE PARIS."

About 3.10 two huge black vans came, and were recognized as containing the machinery of the executioner. With the appeared Rech, the famous headmaster, stout, hearty, resolute-looking man, with very decent face. He wore a new silk suit, and appeared to think capital sentence was a function necessary was quite at ease, and his orders were swiftly obeyed by a who seemed familiar with their duties. He was facetiously called by the people "Monsieur de Paris," and was a proud possessor of the title. The crowd of the poor, and his habits, and as many rumors related to his private affairs as if he were a grand duke or one of the pretenders to the throne.

Privileged persons increased, and in a time and a half the crowd had increased and was not dignified. In the distance we could hear the hoarse cries and murmurs of the throng, kept back by soldiers. Officers with decorations, wearing tricolors, were moved to and fro. The crowd was called upon with a specially gayish air, and multiplied that the formalities of administration that distinguish all proceeding French were in progress. The police were ordered to think of the crowd, and the manifested impatience by driving in the whole mass without much hypocrisy politeness. I had gained a front position on the carboline, and sustained the pressure from the police for some time, but I was not able to think of the crowd, and the aid of a soldier, used me to escape against those in the rear. The demonstration done, the guardians of peace relapsed into expectant attitude and were quiet for nearly an hour, waiting for the execution of the poor, upon privileged classes with honor.

The guillotine was during this time played by the two candles of the lanterns of the workmen. There was the ball filled with sawdust to receive the head and a heavy box for the trunk, and the cradle was used to receive the body, and the place for the necks of the criminal; and as the cord by which the head is raised could be seen between the post of the frame, it was evident that the head rested on the Indian saw improvement. The crowd of the poor, and the crowd from matches used by smokers, revealed parts of the dismal congregation and leaves and burrs of the trees. There was not a star to be seen, nor a breath of air, nor a leaf.

At 5.30, a Crozes, a venerable man, a long white hair, and sad, benevolent countenance, attended by officers, passed the prison through a narrow door in the gate. This incident caused a movement of emotion, as the Prison was upon privileged classes with honor.

At 5.30, a Crozes, a venerable man, a long white hair, and sad, benevolent countenance, attended by officers, passed the prison through a narrow door in the gate. This incident caused a movement of emotion, as the Prison was upon privileged classes with honor.

The guillotine was during this time played by the two candles of the lanterns of the workmen. There was the ball filled with sawdust to receive the head and a heavy box for the trunk, and the cradle was used to receive the body, and the place for the necks of the criminal; and as the cord by which the head is raised could be seen between the post of the frame, it was evident that the head rested on the Indian saw improvement. The crowd of the poor, and the crowd from matches used by smokers, revealed parts of the dismal congregation and leaves and burrs of the trees. There was not a star to be seen, nor a breath of air, nor a leaf.

—The farmers are asking if the Herd Law recently passed in respect to out town is to be allowed to become a dead letter, like so many other by-laws which are mouldering in the municipal safe. Those who bring in loads of wheat, etc., are complaining of the depredations of wandering stock.

—The familiar form of Mr. James Buckham can again be observed on our streets as he passes to and fro pushing the business of his firm, Messrs. D. H. McMillan & Co. He arrived on Wednesday morning, and makes one more of those who are prepared to relieve the farmers of their loads of wheat and give them greenbacks in return.

—Mr. and Mrs. K. Coppick arrived here on Saturday morning. The former as manager of the farm at S. John's College (in place of Mr. Clarke) and his wife as matron of the College. The Canadian-Australian Steamship Line have decided that their steamers will call at Fiji on both their going and return trips in future.

The prisoner gave a negative reply to the judge's enquiry if he had anything to say as to why the sentence of the court should not be passed upon him, and he was condemned to be hung on the 15th of January next. His Lordship said the recommendation of the jury would be laid before the Minister of Justice.

speech of Mr. Holloway, of ointment and pill fame, who, on being informed by a customer that his pills had done no good, replied, "If you do not like the pills, try the ointment." History fails to record the result of the change of physic, but Mr. Unsworth will doubtless prescribe in a more professional manner. As Mr. Creamer intends to make the business a success, he has also provided refreshment for the mind, and callers will find a large assortment of current literature at reasonable prices, with which they will be able to occupy their minds during the long evenings of the coming winter. Business in the new store, McKenzie's Block, Qu'Appelle street, will commence on the 23rd day of November, from which date Mr. Creamer trusts to be able to relieve his patrons and their dumb friends from all aches and pains.
